

M.Ed. in Education with a concentration in Secondary Education

The deactivation of the M.Ed. in Education with an emphasis in Secondary Education was requested due to the implementation of a more viable program. The new program, an M.Ed. in Curriculum and Instruction, is more attractive to our secondary education students as it provides them with a Master's degree and an endorsement as a Curriculum and Instruction specialist. By deactivating this program, we are able to make better use of our resources and meet the current needs of our students.

The College of Education seeks to deactivate the aforementioned program in order to focus resources and growth initiatives on existing programs. At this time, the College of Education is focused on consolidating programs so that recruiting efforts may be focused on programs with greater potential for strong growth and sustainability in the future. With recent changes from the PSC and current trends in education, the College of Education voted to deactivate the program.
